All who telling all about how the vaccination was performed. The others plucked up courage and gradually they all went upstairs. The clamor they had made before the doctor appeared among them was nothing to that which followed when all had gathered again on the sidewalk after being vaccinated. Each claimed to have stood the operation best and that "he did it to me harder" than he did to any of the others. They were all as brave as could be and now that the operation was over and done, it was nothing at all to go through it and they could stand it as long as the doctor could and a great deal longer. Anticipation has more effect on the youngsters' systems than the actual operation and even in this adults are no exception. The operation is over in a few minutes.
